THE BOSTON GLOBE MONDAY, MARCH 30, 2020 | BOSTONGLOBE.COM/BUSINESS

It actually may be THE END OF THE WORLD AS WE KNOW IT

Business futurists and sci-fi writers look ahead to how the coronavirus could reshape work and everyday life

Curricula for students will be customized and augmented... parents and children will be able to take advantage of a rapidly growing array of online teaching resources."

Thornton May
Founder of the Digital Value Institute, a think tank of technology leaders

More of our most vital and personal activities will have to go online....I've been playing Dungeons & Dragons with my gamer group using videoconferencing, and watching TV with a housebound, high-risk loved one by hitting play at the same time on a TV episode and videochatting with him at the same time."

Annalee Newitz
Science fiction author, podcaster, nonfiction author

Many more families [will be] choosing to videoconference their Christmas morning because it's less of a hassle and danger than being exposed to the Christmas crowds."

Tobias Buckell
Science fiction author and futurist
